The Canon of Scripture

Last week, I wrote about how we as Catholics receive Divine Revelation from two sources. They are Sacred Tradition and Sacred Scripture, and these are interpreted by the Magisterium. I described what Sacred Tradition is and where it comes from, but do we ever wonder about how the Sacred Scriptures came to be as we have it? Why does the Catholic bible have more books in it than some other bibles?

The first thing to note is that God is the primary author of scripture. The scriptures are his love letters to us. Even though God is the primary author, he works through the human authors using their gifts and talents to speak the Truth about his Word to us. Even though there are multiple books in the bible, they all tell the same story. Secondly, the word, “canon”, is a Latin word that means “list.” So, when we speak of the Canon of Scripture, we are speaking of the list of books that we have in the bible. We as Catholics have 73 books in the bible, 46 in the Old Testament, and 27 in the New Testament.

The New Testament is composed of letters from the apostles, The Acts of the Apostles, the Book of Revelation, and the 4 Gospels. All of these were written between 33-100 A.D. (which is short for “Anno Domini” which means “Year of our Lord”). However, in the years of the early Church prior to 382 this list was not set in stone. There were these letters and others, and each Church used what they had available to them. The first published canon or list of the books was written by the Council of Rome in 382 AD under the leadership of Pope Damasus. It was then reaffirmed by the regional councils of Hippo in 393 AD and Carthage in 397 AD. It was reaffirmed once again at the Council of Trent which convened from 1545-1563 as a response to the Protestant Reformation.

There were four criteria for the canon of the New Testament. First, the books or letters had to be Orthodox meaning it had to teach True Christian Doctrine. Second, they had to be Universal, used throughout the Christian world. Third, they had to be Liturgical, meaning that they had to be read aloud in the liturgy in the churches. Fourth, they had to be Apostolic, meaning that they had to be written by either an apostle or the immediate disciple of an apostle. The bishops used these criteria and the guidance of the Holy Spirit to determine the books that the Lord wanted to be part of the New Testament Canon.

There are two versions of the Old Testament at the time of Jesus and the early Church. One was written in Greek called the Septuagint, and it had 46 books in it. The other was written in Hebrew with 39 books in it. The early church used the Greek version with the 46 books and when the canon for the bible was set in 382, that was the version that they continued to use. That stayed the same until the 1500s when Martin Luther rejected what was called the Deuterocanonical books, the seven books found in the Greek version, but not the Hebrew version. He decided to use the Hebrew version of the Old Testament which excluded those 7 books from the Old Testament. Then the Church reaffirmed at the council of Trent that she would stick with the tradition and canon of scripture that the Church had held since 382. The seven deuterocanonical books are: Tobit, Judith, 1 & 2 Maccabees, Wisdom, Ecclesiasticus, Baruch, and there are parts of Esther and Daniel that are removed.

This is the oversimplified version of how the Canon of Scripture came to be established. It shows how the Sacred Tradition and Sacred Scripture cannot be divorced but are intimately tied together to share God’s self-revelation to us.
